

HANDKERCHIEF KEITH O'BRIEN

Santa Claus is a Jolly Old Soul.

His life is given unreservedly to making little children happy.

Christmas is designated as the day in which their cup of joy shall be full.

Throughout the year he makes presents for the little ones.

Where his workshop is no one knows.

But we do know that when snow-time comes and the weather grows cold railway trains come tooting in to Salt Lake City carrying cars of playthings to the big store of Keith-O'Brien Company.

There they are arranged in displays for good children to inspect.

There Santa Claus greets the little tots.

Then the parents visit the toys.

Then comes Christmas.

Santa Claus is happy; the children are happy; the parents are happy—and because parents know what to do under such circumstances Keith-O'Brien Company become happy.

Christmas cups and saucers at prices lower than they usually sell at.

The basement is full of inexpensive presents.

The display of silverware in the center of the first floor is very attractive—but no more so than the reasonable prices which are cut in twain.

The handkerchiefs are now located in front, directly before you if you enter at the south door.
